As a burn survivor, I can understand the pain that you all might be going through or have gone through during your life. The most important thing that I do know is that if I was able to find what is needed to become and remain a burn survivor, you can do the same.

Something that you should always remember is that suffering a burn injury or any other accident during your life, you are still alive. You did not loose our life. If you have not realized this yet, I ask you to please search within yourself, and find your purpose in life. Whatever that purpose is, you need to reach for that goal. Do not allow the pain, the burn or any other type of injury to stop you from accomplishing that goal! If you worry, you are allowing the negative ideas and emotions to take control. The end result is negative. The only changes that this can make, is for you to take steps backwards.

It's really awesome to find another website that helps support burn survivors. On May 2nd 2001 I had the worst day of my life. I woke up like any other day. After I proceeded to get out of the shower, I noticed a funny smell threw out the house. The entire house was filled with gas. My son went running into the living room and my daughter was still on the bed. The entire house exploded. I had glass fly in my face and I was severely flash flame burned. I was not so concerned with myself but I wanted to make sure the kids were ok. I went and got the baby and when I got outside with her my son was already out with someone who heard the explosion from down the street. I was air lifted to UCSD burn unit in San Diego. I was in a coma for a month and in the hospital for a total of 3 months. I was only 22 years old. I was burned 53% of my body. My scars are my war scars reminding everyday that I fought a battle and won. And I am a survivor!

Burned...Do Not Play With Fire

"I went to the baby and there were no flames near him at the time. I tried to pick him up but my hands were badly burned.... I couldn't pick him up. I pushed with my entire body the chair as far away from the flames as possible. By this time he had stopped crying. I then ran into the dining room.

The paramedics got me into the ambulance swiftly and I was fighting and asking over and over again if the baby was all right?" Of course they were so busy with me they did not know about the baby.

I still had surgery after surgery and therapy treatment constantly. I felt like it would never be over.

Now I am older and there are the aspects of it is much harder to get girls with the burn scars and I am sure as I go on in life more problems will come up all because I am burned.

So remember, when you start a fire you can hurt and kill others, not just destroy property. My brothers had to learn that the hard way. They started this fire and everyday that they see me they know I am a Burn Survivor because of them. "

Survival

After the burn injury did I want to survive?
Was life worth the changes I could not hide?

Surgeries pain and always stuck in the bed
Would it be better to be dead?

As a burn survivor will you support me?
Will you tell me the recovery path you took?

Will this help me?
Will I be able to close this horrible book?

These questions I asked myself each and every day
Because I could not find the help to show me the way

If you can answer them please let me know
Then maybe I will understand the path I have to go
